

Eleanor is a Product Design and Manufacture student at the University of Nottingham. She is passionate about using engineering and innovation to create positive change, especially in the fields of renewable and sustainable energy engineering or assistive technology. In her time as a student she has been a part of the team to launch iForge, the UK's first student-led makerspace, and competed on the presentation team at the Enactus National competition for the University of Sheffield.

